

MURDER FUGITIVE ARRESTED ON LINER

Detectives Found Him in Hiding in Steerage When Steamship Arrived.

MET DOWN THE BAY.

Serrano, Wanted for Killing in Danbury, Fled to Italy Nearly a Year Ago.

As the steamship Cetra de Napoli halted at Quarantine to-day coming in, Detective Sergt. Joe Petrosio and two other Italian sleuths from Headquarters, climbed up her sides on swinging ladders that had been let down to the bounding government tug. The detectives made straight for the forecastle deck where hundreds of bronzed immigrants packed the rails, watching the sky line of Manhattan unfold before them. Then whoever they were looking for was on deck evidently. As they went through the steerage, there was only one man in the dinky, smelly place. This was a little man, wearing an Italian such but an American brogan, who coiled as far back in his bunk as he could go like a porpoise in a shell. The three detectives halted as they came opposite him.

"Come out of there, Dominico Serrano," said Petrosio to him, in the patois of the Neapolitans, "you're wanted."

The little grubby, stubby man unfolded himself and crawled out and stood up by his half-bushel of baggage. "Yes, fater," he answered back. "I go." And he held out his brown wrists for the bracelets.

Nearly a year ago Dominico Serrano, working with a gang of laborers on a railroad job at Mill Plant, near Danbury, Conn., fell out with one Dominico Destatano. In his impulsive way he took club and beat out Destatano's brains for him. They traced the murderer to this city, but he took a steamer for Italy before the men from the Central Office could find him in the runways of Mulberry Bend. He didn't know it, but ever since then the police of Naples have had an eye on his movements. Last week he started back for this country. It looked safe enough to him. But a newsword cablegram came across the waters to New York almost before the boat that bore him, with five hundred more, who looked just like him, was out of sight of land. That was why Petrosio and his men met her at Quarantine to-day. Officers from Danbury will be let tonight for Dominico Serrano. He has been indicted for murder in the first degree ever since Aug. 8.

BOY OF 14 SAVES TWO LIVES.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., April 20.—Fred Denmarsh, fourteen years old, saved the lives of Annie Clark and Joe Harris yesterday. The children fell from the pier in front of Terry's elevator. A score of railroad laborers stood on the viaduct, watching the children drown, when Fred Denmarsh rushed to the pier, dived in and brought both safely to land, remarking as he landed them: "I have saved the life of you two kids, but don't you dare go in the water again, for if you do you'll drown."

Then the little hero vanished in the crowd and the two who were rescued went to their homes on Water street. The water, into which they fell, was twelve feet deep, and but for young Denmarsh's bravery both children would undoubtedly have been drowned.

Indians Mutilate Williams's Body.
EL PASO, Tex., April 20.—Details of the killing of Samuel Williams, of this city, in Sonora, Mexico, Saturday by Indians show that he was with a party including Louis Groux, Bert Cunningham, Mrs. Cunningham and child, and a Mexican girl. Groux and Cunningham are from Los Angeles and are officials of the Groux mine at Carbo. Williams was killed at the first volley. Groux fell back and helped Cunningham cover the retreat of the women and baby. Later, with an escort, the men returned for Williams's body and found it mutilated.

West Twenty-third Street

MAD DOG IN RAIN OF SHOTS BITES FIVE PERSONS.

A small black and white dog which sought shelter in the tenement house at No. 186 Delancey street a few days ago became mad last evening as a result of persecutions by children and ran into the shoe store on the ground floor, where it bit Solomon Schling in the shoe. Then it ran through Delancey street under the new bridge, where it caused a panic among the pushcart men. Policeman Schaefer chased the animal, firing as he ran. Before the dog was killed, however, it bit Joseph White, twenty-four years old, of No. 74 Oliver street, in the left leg; Herman Fasse, fifteen, No. 186 Delancey street, in the left arm; Abraham Rosenfeld, thirteen, No. 186 Delancey street, in the right arm, and Herman Schaefer, forty, No. 22 Delancey street, in the left arm. Their wounds were cauterized at Governor Hospital.

About a dozen shots were fired by the policeman before he hit the dog. The noise of the shooting caused much excitement.
